

Would you like a quick and easy way to get your venue's message to an arts audience across England? One that lets you upload your own content, so you're in control? And would you like it to be quick, easy and best of all ... absolutely free?

The Artists and Makers website has been running since 2003, and has built up a loyal, trusting readership who are actively looking for arts events, performances and other activities.

And Artists and Makers allows you to add events to a what's on guide covering Sussex, Surrey, Hampshire, Kent and London; or you can contribute editorial and reviews. All content is added using simple and quick online forms, and is swiftly approved and added to the site, with events shown on a calendar and a useful map as well.

Other content is written by a small team of experienced arts journalists, both sourcing original content and using press releases sent by venues and organisations like Pallant House Gallery, Tate Modern, Tate Britain, the National Gallery, Theatre Royal Brighton, Horsham District Council, Chichester Festival Theatre & Brighton Artists Open Houses.

As well as the main site, Artists and Makers has active Facebook groups, uses microblogging platform Twitter, and runs a Flickr photo group - meaning that your message can be spread across social networking sites as well.

Three Steps To Getting Your Events Seen...

1. Add them to the events guide at artistsandmakers.com/submit-event
2. Send a press release to rag@artistsandmakers.com - and make sure it is on your press contacts list for future news
3. Email the editor dan@artistsandmakers.com with a competition, promotion or giveaway

Adding Editorial...

It's easy to add your editorial content to the site. First, sign up to get a unique user name; then get writing, using a simple form to add your story to the content management system/ And if you get stuck - email dan@artistsandmakers.com

46^{up to},000
arts-loving visitors
a month

